

AIG Announces Changes in Technology Leadership

March 6, 2017 2:45 PM ET

NEW YORK--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Mar. 6, 2017-- American International Group, Inc. (NYSE: AIG) announced today that Martha Gallo has been named Chief Information Officer. She previously served as AIG's Chief Auditor. She succeeds Philip Fasano, who has left the company to pursue other opportunities. AIG plans to appoint a new Chief Auditor in the near term.

"Martha is a highly experienced business leader, having held a number of senior roles leading technology teams prior to joining AIG. She has a proven track record of delivering measurable, sustainable results to drive business performance," said Peter D. Hancock, President and Chief Executive Officer. "Technology investment and implementation remains a key priority as we focus on bringing new innovations to our clients to help them face their most pressing challenges."

"Phil elevated our ambitions and approach to technology, as well as making significant improvements in AIG's IT capabilities during his time with the company. He also helped bring together a highly talented technology team whose efforts have begun transforming the way we work, and have enabled our businesses to compete more effectively. I want to extend our sincere appreciation to Phil for his leadership and partnership."
